[2011]	Impromptu Laptop Quintet, CCRMA, Stanford University, Stanford, CA.
[2010]	SynthesImage, spectral synthesis Spectral synthesis audio sonification of image gallery.
[2009]	CodeTrain, algorithmic analysis and performance Algorithmic compositional tool written in Common LISP to create performances in the style of John Coltrane. The software is capable of recognizing patterns in rhythm, note order, and melodic, harmonic and contrapuntal progressions, producing new music in the style of the input data set.
[2008]	c2, Tonic Room, Chicago, IL. Electronic performance, laptop, physical objects, electronics, controllers.
[2008]	Glitch Machine v1.2 LISP coded system used to analyze and modulate rhythm data sets and create rhythmically new, complex and polyrhythmic patterns.
[2007]	Ellis, list sonification Data analysis tool written in Common LISP. Originally utilized to provide an auditory representation of inaudible information such as earthquake activity, populations across locations, weather patterns, and extraterrestrial storms.

Ellis scales and translates any list of information into MIDI pitch, velocity, ontimes, duration, and channel, amongst other musical parameters.

[2007]	a·morph·ous, algorithmic composer Transformative algorithmic compositional software written under the mentorship of David Cope and his Experiments in Musical Intelligence, with the original intention to produce more symphonic works in the styles of Gustav Mahler and Béla Bartók. Developed as a model, the software is capable of recognizing patterns in rhythm, note order, and melodic, harmonic and contrapuntal progressions, producing new music in the style of the input data set. Developed with three analysis systems: polyphonic without rhythm for intractability, polyphonic with rhythm utilizing a Markov decision model, and polyphonic with rhythm and measure structure utilizing a Markov model while constraining analysis to smaller segments for less divergent composition.
[2006]	IMPULSION, electroacoustic improvisation & field recording soundscape Multi-channel installation of an improvised performance of a self-designed percussion instrument and found sounds processed by self-designed impulse responses captured at their original recording location.
[2006]	Viriconium, Muse Gallery, Chicago, IL. Autonomous and interactive prepared percussion and synthesis installation utilizing a recursive feedback instrument.
[2005]	c2, McGonigal's, Barrington, IL. Live electronics and sound experiments with live electronic ensemble 7 League Boots.
[2004]	Girl on a Train, The Onion, Chicago, IL. Electronic performance, laptop, noisemakers, electronics, controllers, drum kit.
[2004]	String diSection, interactive concatenation system developed with in a game engine.

[2016] ADAPTIVE LEARNING DESIGN IMPLICATIONS: EFFECTS OF MULTIMEDIA ON LEARNING EFFICACY AND COGNITIVE LOAD

The present plan is an experimental and data-driven study to inform effective adaptive learning domain model development decisions with an incipient exploration of cognitive load and learning efficacy when utilizing multimedia stimuli. The systems underlying these platforms rely on sophisticated feedback of human interaction, educational theory, learning analytics and educational data mining. The current pilot is comprised of an overview of the proposed research, relevant literature of orthogonal and intersecting agendas, imbricated methodological experimentation, data processing and anticipated challenges. Results are expected to demonstrate that media types and combinations of media will exhibit varying cognitive load, consequently impacting learning efficacy.

[2016] EFFECTS OF ARTS EDUCATION AND UNDERSERVED COMMUNITIES

This article explores the potential of arts education access and practice, and advocates that arts education is integral to human rights, social justice and academic, democratic and cultural inclusivity with qualities of particular importance to the empowerment and equity of underserved communities.
